It's not a fun topic, but "gray divorce" is on the rise: divorces after age 50 are happening at more than twice the rate than a couple decades ago. (Pew Center Study)

Today, the average American lives to age 82- nearly 20 years after the average retirement age. If you are healthy and financially prepared, you may spend 30 years in retirement. When divorcing at a later age, you face different challenges and have different priorities than younger couples.

We've helped clients navigate the difficult challenges of divorce, both before and after the breakup. It's often a very emotionally stressful time for the family members involved. Here are a few ways we can help:

1. Listen and understand your concerns and goals.
2. Be an objective and independent voice while analyzing the financial impact of different options.
3. Share information that might be missing from your settlement discussions that will lead to a more thoughtful and fair financial outcome.
5. Review your beneficiary designations on retirement plans, insurance policies, and look your estate planning documents together with an attorney.
6. Be a compassionate advocate for your goals.
7. Review important topics like: retirement spending, cash flow, taxes, and health care expenses.

Ultimately, looking at your entire financial picture with an independent professional like us allows you to make the best long-term decisions for your future.
