Last week, while waiting to be helped at the Enterprise Rental Car counter, I saw the receptionist had a ton of notes written on a big notepad at her desk.

I peeked at her notes.

Here's what I saw:

- "Growth mindset vs fixed mindset."
"Believe in myself even if no one else does."
"Set big goals."
"Attract more positive thinking in my life."
"Don't focus on obstacles or limitations."

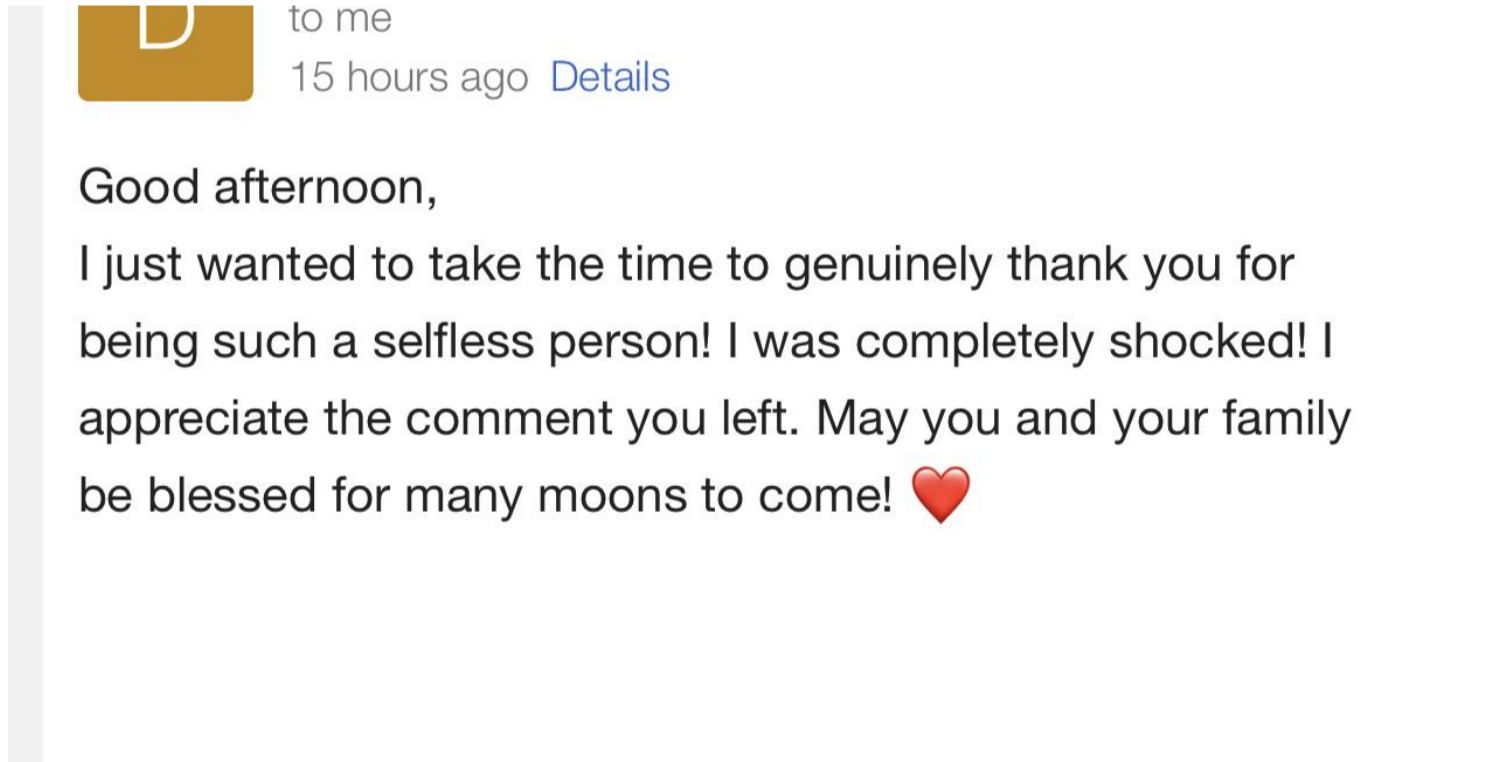

After she helped me get my rental, I said, "I couldn't help but peek at your notepad! Are you reading a new book?"

She said, "I'm trying to learn how I can better my life and found a self-improvement app for women."

I asked if I could share some thoughts on this topic and she excitedly wrote down the encouraging advice I gave her! Her big goal is to move out and get her own apartment someday.

I got home and was so excited for her journey and willingness to learn that I called the place back and asked her colleague for her venmo... and then sent a surprise $ gift with the message "a growth mindset attracts unexpected blessings! You got this!"

I'm not sharing this to brag. It was an impulsive gift that helped inspire a young person and got her much closer to her goals.

It feels better to give than receive.
