Of all the “important” titles I could hold, being a “Father” is up at the top of my list. Being a father requires me to be better than I otherwise would be. I realize my kids will follow my example much more than my advice, and that motivates me to improve.

There’s no greater feeling that entering the house after a long day at work and having one of our five kids run up excitedly to give me a big hug and start telling me all about their day! I work extra hard to not only create opportunities for our kids, but to show them the value of hard work. I want the best for each of them, and hope they can succeed in ways far beyond me, doing whatever they love to do.

Though American society seems to be divided on the value and merit of fatherhood, the lasting impact of good dads cannot be dismissed. I owe much gratitude to my own dad, for teaching me how to be a leader and to treat everyone with respect and kindness, regardless of their background.

This picture is special to me. My dad took the photo and to me, it’s worth 1,000+ words...my boys all trying to be like their dad. To all the dads and future dads out there, HAPPY FATHER’S DAY!! I hope you all have a great weekend, and take time to celebrate!
